“The true aim of education is to awaken real powers of perception and judgment in relation to life and living. For only such an awakening can lead to true freedom.”

Rudolf Steiner
Founder, Waldorf Education

Leading Educators Agree That Waldorf Education Works Wonders

“Steiner was very ahead of his time. What he recognized about learning in the early 1900s is gradually being substantiated by new discoveries in brain research. For more than [90] years, Waldorf education has been putting into effect what major brain researchers and educators are discovering about the human brain/mind. Waldorf is now being recognized and what Rudolf Steiner envisioned is only beginning to be part of the educational consciousness.”

Dr. Gabriele Rico, Professor of English and Creative Arts, San Jose University

Author of the classic Writing the Natural Way

“What every parent would wish as the best for his or her children, Waldorf education provides.

The fullest development of intelligent, imaginative, self-confident and caring persons is the aim of Waldorf education.

This aim is solidly grounded in a comprehensive view of human development, in an intellectually and culturally rich curriculum, and in the presence of knowledgeable, caring human beings at every stage of the child's education.”

Douglas Sloan, Professor Emeritus, Columbia University

“With Waldorf education there is an integration of subject matter so that the children use heart, head, and hands in their education—a complete education, if you will.”

Dr. Robert Peterkin, Director, Harvard
Urban Superintendent Program

Former Milwaukee Superintendent of Schools

“I believe that Waldorf education possesses unique educational features that have considerable potential for improving public education in America.

The time is well ripe for the public schools to explore the ways in which ideas in Waldorf education might be explored in their own settings.”

Eliot Eisner, PhD, Professor of Education and Art,
Stanford University

Waldorf School of Princeton Has Been Developing Outstanding Students for the Past 29 Years

Our 20-Acre Campus Sets the Stage for Higher Learning

The grounds feature pristine woods and stream, a greenhouse and garden, and fields of open space.

Every Student Learns to Play a Musical Instrument

A progression from recorder to stringed instruments is followed, building the capacity for complex thinking and fine motor skills.

Every Student Acts in an Annual Class Play

By graduation, each student's confidence, public speaking skills, and overall persona has grown substantially.

Every Student Learns a World Language

The language program provides much more than just the semantics of language. Students immerse themselves in the history, art, music, movement, and geographical regions of their foreign language, creating a full cultural experience.

Every Student Learns and Experiences Both the Fine Arts (Drawing, Painting, Sculpting) and the Practical Arts (Building, Gardening, Handwork, Woodworking)

Children working purposefully with their hands naturally strengthen their willpower, their learning perspective, and connection to others.

The Importance of Play Is Honored and Part of the School Curriculum

Outdoor play nurtures and develops imaginative thinking, while also giving the student the direct experience of being part of a group activity on a daily basis.

Waldorf School of Princeton Faculty Are Highly Trained, Incredibly Dedicated Professionals

Waldorf School of Princeton teachers focus on the total development of their students, preparing them to excel in the area's top high schools.

Waldorf School of Princeton Students Achieve Academic Success in High School, College, and Beyond

Alumnus Carrick Porter was named Hun's top academic student for his freshman class. Other Waldorf students are also thriving at other leading high schools in the area including: The Lawrenceville School, Princeton Day School, George School, and Solebury School.

Top Area High School Teachers Affirm that Waldorf Students Are Among the Very Best

“In my fourteen years of teaching history to high school students, I’ve noticed that Waldorf students are different. They’ve been among my best students, and they always stand out for their genuine curiosity about the world and their strong will, which enables them to get deeper and see more complexity. By asking a few of my best students over the years where they had gone to school before Lawrenceville, I learned the thing they had in common was Waldorf.”

Leonard A. Miller

History Master, The Lawrenceville School

The Waldorf School of Princeton Is a Community That Values Character Education

Family,
an unforced unfolding
of childhood,
intellectual excellence,
imagination,
ethical judgment,
and joyful learning.
